VACCINATION IS KEY TO PROTECT PIGLETS FROM DISEASES ON THE FARM

Prevention is far less expensive than treatment. Vaccination is undoubtedly one of the most valuable tools to minimize the impact of pathogens on farms nowadays, aiming to achieve the goal of producing high-quality piglets.

Veterinarians are actively involved in on-farm vaccination :

- o Farm health
- o Selection of vaccines
- o Vaccination protocols
- o Vaccination schedule

But sometimes, the final steps of the process can only be performed by field personnel :

- o Storage and preparation of the vaccine
- o Follow-up of the animals

In such cases, how to be sure that vaccination is properly done ?

Farm teams are not always aware of good vaccination practices and it is almost impossible for vets to check each vaccination that is done in the field.

When vaccination does not perform as expected, it is a priority to correctly interpret the failures.

Before blaming the vaccine, we should ask: did the vaccine fail us or did we fail the vaccine?

Vaccination Management encompasses the primary causes of vaccination failures.

Ceva P.I.G Program™

Ceva's solution helping farmers produce high-quality piglets

P.I.G Program™ is a service provided by Ceva to assist veterinarians and farmers in improving and promoting good vaccination practices throughout the entire process, starting from the arrival of the vaccine on the farm to the measurement of its effects.

Ceva P.I.G Program™ by Ceva

A protocol-based method that promotes good vaccination practices by identifying measurable and easily improvable key points related to vaccination on farms, ensuring the animals receive proper vaccination.

Through the analysis of the vaccination process, the evaluation of its quality, and the training of the people involved, Ceva emphasizes the importance of proper vaccination as a pillar to achieve high-quality piglets.
